Excerpt from The Book of Joshua: A Critical and Expository Commentary of the Hebrew Text

The following Commentary comprises notes grammatical, exegetical, historical, and ethical. The Grammar followed is that of Gesenius, not only in the syntax, but the orthography; for thus, when Hebrew words are written in their corresponding English letters, p is always expressed by q, and x by ts, instead of by k and z respectively, as in many grammars. Further, in giving the derivation and meaning of the Hebrew names of persons, places, towns, etc., the Lexicon of Gesenius has been chiefly consulted. Many also of the renderings which differ from those in the Authorised Version will be found to agree with those in the Revised Version, which had not been published when this work was finished.
