I hope to help you solve your kissing concerns and answer all of your kissing questions. A kiss can be a very delicate thing, especially if it's your first (or your first with this partner). The worst thing you can do is blow it! But really, there's nothing to worry about, because with our advice and a little practice (YES!) you'll be on your way to becoming the great kisser you have wanted to be.

The most important thing is to kiss someone you like! Mutual attraction is essential to a great kiss. Without it, all you're doing is pressing your lips together, and you'll leave feeling unfulfilled and disappointed.

Kissing is a way to show affection, to let someone know you really like them, and a passionate way to say "I love you." The more feeling there is behind the kiss, the more enjoyable it will be. This is why kissing just anyone isn't really that fun, and definitely isn't a good idea. If you save those strong, passionate kisses for someone you truly have feelings for, your kissing experience will be 100 times more exciting. One of the biggest factors in good kissing is this attraction itself, as opposed to pure technique
